

Zotero soon is Everywhere

Martin Fenner, Gobbledygook

September 22, 2010

Whereas most reference managers are either standalone applications and/or web-based, Zotero works as a Firefox plugin. This approach has many advantages, but is not for everybody. So today Zotero announced Zotero Everywhere:

- A browser plugin for Microsoft Internet Explorer, Apple Safari and Google Chrome, and standalone desktop version for Windows, Mac and Linux
- An expanded Zotero web API that gives developers full read and write access to all of Zotero's features.

Zotero Everywhere goes beyond allowing users to use Zotero with other browsers. The enhanced API will give developers the chance to build an infrastructure around Zotero, from mobile applications to integration with other services. No dates were given about the availability of Zotero Everywhere. The project is funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.