Regular readers of this blog know that I'm a big fan of the reference manager Papers – three years ago we even had a poetry contest when the iPhone version was first released. The strength of Papers has always been the very nice user interface, and Papers 2 released last March was a major update that added many more reference types, collaboration and a word processor plugin.

The first five years Papers has been only available for Mac and iPhone/iPad, but this week mekentosj.com released a pre-release version for Windows. Papers for Windows is a collaboration with Scimatic Software, and a comparison of the Mac and Windows versions is here. A 30 day trial version is available for download from mekentosj.com.
